RENO REDUCTION WORKS.

A Discussion Between the News Reporter and the Journal.

The Dayton News Reporter says: The Reno Reduction Works have proved a profitable investment to their owners. The works have all the work they can do, their capacity could be doubled and still we have no doubt they would be kept running. It is a great advantage to prospectors to be able to put their ore on the cars, ship it to Reno and receive their money for it by return mail. But, no matter how small the amount, the shipper expects to receive the full value of it. Parties here who have made several shipments of ore to the Reno Reduction Works, say they are the best appointed Works on the Coast and can do the best kind of work. These parties were thoroughly satisfied with the returns from the first two or three lots of ore reduced there, but after that the returns were not so satisfactory, they kept falling off, until finally they concluded to ship no more ore to Reno for reduction. They are now having their ore reduced elsewhere, and although the milling and transportation expenses are greater, their ore nets them more. It may be that the falling off in the returns last made by the Reno mill, was due to carelessness in the process of reduction, we do not like to think that it was due to dishonesty, but it was one or the other. Whatever is the cause it should be removed. It will not be long, if such methods are kept up, until the Reno Reduction Works will have to mine their own ore if they reduce any.

To this the Journal replies: The ridiculous charges above named, of carelessness or dishonesty, is without any foundation whatever, as the facts readily show. The customers of these works do not have to depend for results upon the actual working of the ore, and if the results do not show the 90 per cent. of the assay value no one but the company is loser. The ore is paid for as soon as sampled, and its value ascertained by assay. During the progress of sampling, the utmost care is exercised and the customer invited to witness the entire operation, and follow the sample into the assay office where it is quartered. The assay is made from any part he may select, and he is given a part of the identical sample to have assays made at other offices for comparison if he desires. Check samples are also preserved at the works for further assays in case of any variance. The process of sampling at these works is admitted by experienced mill men and miners to be thorough and fair, as the most approved methods are followed. The real facts about complaints of the above character are, that miners in making up a carload for shipment, frequently throw in a quantity of low grade ore. If they exercised more care in assorting, the better results would repay the trouble. Of one positive fact all may feel assured, and that is, that carelessness is not permitted at the Reduction Works, and honesty is the pride of the managers, as can be seen by every patron who desires to witness the operation of sampler.

Hong Di Captured.

On Sunday last A. L. Sherbert, a sewing machine agent saw a Chinaman hurrying across a grain field near Chico and surmised that it was the murderer of Mr. Billion. He gave chase and the man he caught proved to be the Chinaman, for whom he received $3,800 which had been offered. The excitement about Chico was very great when the prisoner was brought in. The Chinaman says that he did not want to kill Mrs. Billion but fired the shot at Weaver a man who worked on the ranch. He said that he discovered Weaver and Mrs. Billion in flagrante and overheard Weaver tell Mrs. Billion that he would kill the Chinaman before night to keep him from telling what he knew. The fact that Weaver fled the country as soon as he heard of Hong Di's capture is regarded by the people of Chico as a corroboration of the Chinaman's story.

The Orator Abroad.

"Has this man been run over by the cars?" asked the surgeon.
 "No; he is an Irish editor who has been on a stumping tour in Canada."

THE STOREY SAFE ROBBERY.

Mike McGowan Gives a New Version of the Affair.

Yesterday Mike McGowan, well known in this city and Virginia, finished his term of two years in State Prison, and was set at liberty. He was sent up for an assault in Virginia City. He called at the APPEAL office yesterday and said he wished to throw some more light on the Virginia safe robbery. He was in the county jail at the time for an assault on Matt Cannavan. He heard the knocking in the night, and when Nevins was found to be in the safe McGowan was sent down town to hunt someone to open the safe. Afterwards Jim Kingsly and the Washoe toll man were arrested and placed in a cell. Certain parties high in the county came to McGowan and told him if he would lay next the cell all night where the two men were imprisoned he could hear their conversation and give evidence before the Grand Jury. He was offered half the reward if he would get testimony to convict these men, but he knew that the men who made the offer would beat him out of it, so he sent word by a young man in the jail named Johnny Ward, to the prisoners, not to talk during the night, as he had been deputised to overhear them. McGowan was a trusty at the time.

McGowan's theory of the robbery is that the money in the safe never went out of the Court House that night. He says that some men who were friends of Dennis Nevins went in disguise and bucked and gagged as a lark.

When they saw how far the thing had gone they fled the building, leaving him there.

Men inside the building saw their opportunity and made way with the money. The money, he says, was taken out of the back door, and not the front window. The men who got up the lark knew who got the money, and the men who got the money knew who got off the lark, but both are keeping quiet.

McGowan further says that for years juries have been packed on the Comstock, and that any man in the ring can feel safe every time. He, McGowan, was convicted of assaulting a bar-keeper in a saloon, and sent to prison. A young man related to a big mining man was arrested for burglarizing the same place, and allowed to slide out of the back door of the county jail, and has never been seen since.

McGowan charges that men are told to stand in a certain place on the street near the Court House, and when an officer goes out to pick up a jury the men are all there, waiting to be subpoenaed.

McGowan gives a long list of parties implicated in the business, and avers that he can bring the proofs. A part only of his statement is given, however, as some of the charges he makes are not readily substantiated, and the story is given for what it is worth.

Sharp-Shooting Rumpus.

There seems to be a prospect of more bad feeling between the sharpshooters of Virginia and Carson. It is the general opinion in this vicinity that there are members of the Virginia teams who do not shoot on the square. Not many years ago the Virginia men were caught dead to rights using hair triggers in the shooting. They had a contrivance on their guns by which a screw turned one way would enable the trigger to sustain a regulation six pound weight. By turning the screw the other way the trigger would respond to a pound pull, making very nearly a hair trigger of it. Again their are ugly whispers of markers being bribed and targets being doctored. The Carson team has never had the faintest breath of suspicion against it. Its victories have all been won on the dead square and a man who resorted to "funny business" would be kicked out of the team.

The Holstein Wins.

At the New York Dairy and Cattle show just held in Madison Square Gardens, the Holstein bull "Sir Henry of Maplewood" captured the 1st prize. The Frank Leslie's of last week contains a full page picture of the animal and states that the exhibition combined the finest collection of high bred cattle ever collected in one show. The value of the animals ranged from $350 per head to $20,000.

Too Smart for Gould.

NEW YORK, May 21.—This week Jay Gould took away everybody's breath by answering all the questions, explaining his operations in detail, and offering his books for examination. Everybody expected he would lose his memory, dodge questions, forget where his books were, and tell nothing. But everybody got fooled, for the little man was not at all obdurate. The witness seemed to take pleasure in telling how he had laid his plans, foreseen the future of railways, scooped 'em in, made money, and unloaded stock on less far-sighted operators. Only once had he got left, and that was when a lot of New England chaps wanted to sell a railroad to him. He went out to look at it. They had kept back freight ten days on the road, and then turned it all loose just as he got there. It looked like a very busy road, for they were just rushing things. He bought it at a good price and lost money—a couple of millions or so.

Invited to Participate.

The State officers and attaches, the county officers, the Mint attaches, the school children, the inmates of the Orphans' Home, the clergy, the press, etc., have been invited to participate in the parade on the morning of Decoration Day. The exercises will take place at the Opera House at eight o'clock in the evening, and a general invitation to be present is extended.
